Help Us Change Their World:

The Frontier Animal Society's Annual Appeal

There's a saying in animal rescue: "Rescuing one dog or one cat won't change the world, but for that one animal, the world will change forever." For an animal whose world has been turned upside down, the chance to feel safe, to trust and to know the comfort of being loved can mean everything.

Daisy is one of those dogs.

Not even a year old when she was surrendered by her family, Daisy was confused, timid and struggled to adjust to shelter life. Her insecurity made it difficult for potential adopters to see the loving, smart, playful dog she really was. As the months passed, Daisy continued to wait for someone to give her the stability and reassurance she needed. Then came another challenge: a diagnosis of megaesophagus, a condition requiring lifelong special care.

But after 176 long days, Daisy's wait finally came to an end. Now settled in a loving forever home, Daisy's world is no longer one of loneliness and uncertainty, but one filled with fun toys, cozy couch time, long walks and so much love.

And then there's Ada.

Ada was just a kitten when she was found abandoned on a dirt road, still wearing little pink plastic nail caps carelessly glued to her claws. Being left alone outdoors would have been frightening for any young cat, but especially for Ada, whose severely limited vision made her all the more vulnerable.

Diagnosed with bilateral mydriasis, Ada may see only a fraction of the world around her, but that hasn't diminished her playful spirit or curiosity. Ada's rescue journey is still unfolding, but we know this sweet and gentle little cat has a world of love and adventures still ahead of her.

Daisy and Ada are just two of the many deserving dogs and cats who have found a safe haven at Frontier Animal Society. Behind every rescue are veterinary visits, nutritious meals, countless hours of hands-on care and dedicated volunteers who ensure every animal receives the attention and affection they deserve.

But compassion and dedication alone aren't enough. It's the generosity of people like you that allows us to provide the shelter, food, veterinary treatment and enrichment our animals need to thrive.

Without your support, so many dogs and cats would never have the chance to experience a world where they are loved, safe and happy.

Our hope is that one day fewer animals will be born into homelessness, suffer neglect or experience abandonment. Until then, with your help, we will continue doing what we do best: changing their world, one dog and one cat at a time.
